

Max and Kelly

Max and Kelly are friends. They are partners on a class project about Lewis and Clark. Right now, they are meeting at Kelly's house to plan the project.

"Let's get started," says Max. "I have some great ideas."

Kelly replies, "I do too. What do you think about creating a really cool 3-D map of the expedition, and—"

Max interrupts, "First, we need to write a funny one-act play. I'll play Lewis, and you can play Clark. You can be in charge of costumes. I'll put together a program for the audience, but I'll need your help writing some of the information. We'll both build the set. When can you give me sketches of the costumes?"

Kelly says, "Hold on, Max—let's talk about this some more. I have other ideas for us to think about."

"But my idea is great!" Max exclaims. "We should just go ahead and do it."

Kelly says, "That's not fair, Max."
